Two sandwiches, a bag of chips, one or two candy bars, and a soda was an everyday lunch for sophomore April Haler. This everyday meal, plus others, over time created a 300 pound young girl with a low self-esteem and lots of social anxiety.

There were many instances which Haler was picked on about her weight, but one particular instance was always sitting in the back of Haler's mind. Fifth grade year, Haler sat in the dirt among the flowers, many of which were being crushed by her weight, after being shoved by a group of boys laughing and pointing fingers. Even with the teachers help to pull her up it was a challenge. This situation, like many others, led her to trying a new diet. "I've tried just about every diet plan out there-- Atkins, South Beach, Sugar Busters-- you name it I've tried it" Haler said.

Sophomore year in high school, Haler cannot make it out of the lunch line without being made fun of by someone, especially by her biggest fear, boys. Haler stands alone in the lunch line as a boy, his crew at his side, casually stroll up next to her. The boy at the front asks her to be his girlfriend. Turning to his friends and laughing they meander off, leaving Haler, eyes Concretes like these are what build a character for a reader. Specifics help a reader to relate.

this info needs to go into the top but shorten this.

SM East Harbi... 18:54 Yesterday Resolve

how? it just suddenly made them close?

SM East Harbi... 18:54 Yesterday Resolve

developed implies it was new - omit
